Abstract and Objectives:

Over the last decades Architectural visualization has been radically reimaged. Throughout history, drawing was the primary means by which architectural and spatial ideas were conveyed. Over the last twenty years, this has dramatically shifted in favor of renderings and animations. Today, renderings are one of the most common ways that designs are shared and understood, and they are increasingly made by visualization studios and creative agencies. These teams are rethinking the power of the image and what it means for architecture today. In this presentation, we are going to talk about fundamentals of creating good images and explain how composition has a significant role in creating images. then we are going to break down images and discuss what was the idea behind creating them in order to help the participants to create outstanding images for their future projects.
